What is Invoice Factoring?

- Invoice Factoring is a form of commercial financing. With invoice factoring, a business sells outstanding invoices to a factoring company that pays the invoice in as little as 24 hours. The process allows the business to receive cash more quickly than it would by waiting 30-60 days or more for the customer to pay.

- The Factoring Company will keep a small percentage of the invoice amount as a factoring fee.

- Invoice factoring is also called Accounts Receivable Financing.

How Invoice Factoring Works

You send a copy of the invoice you are factoring to your customer and also to the factoring company.

The Factor forwards 80-90% of the invoice in cash to you.

The Factor acts as your accounts receivable department and collects on the invoice.

Your customer pays 100% of the invoice to the Factor.

After your customer pays in full, the Factor pays you the remaining 10-20% in cash, less fees.

Big business is the worst, according to Dun & Bradstreet. Its latest report into credit-worthiness shows big business --- those with more than 500 employees – are the slowest at paying.

How much does it cost?

What about cost? When you decide to factor, your factoring company will set a rate, which is dependent upon several things, such as:

- Sales volume
- Invoice size
- The creditworthiness of your customers
- The number of creditworthy customers
- The length of your contract with each customer
- The number of days the invoice is outstanding

Factoring often appears to cost more than a traditional loan, but if you are cash flow challenged, the cash flow shortage can have devastating effects on your business.
